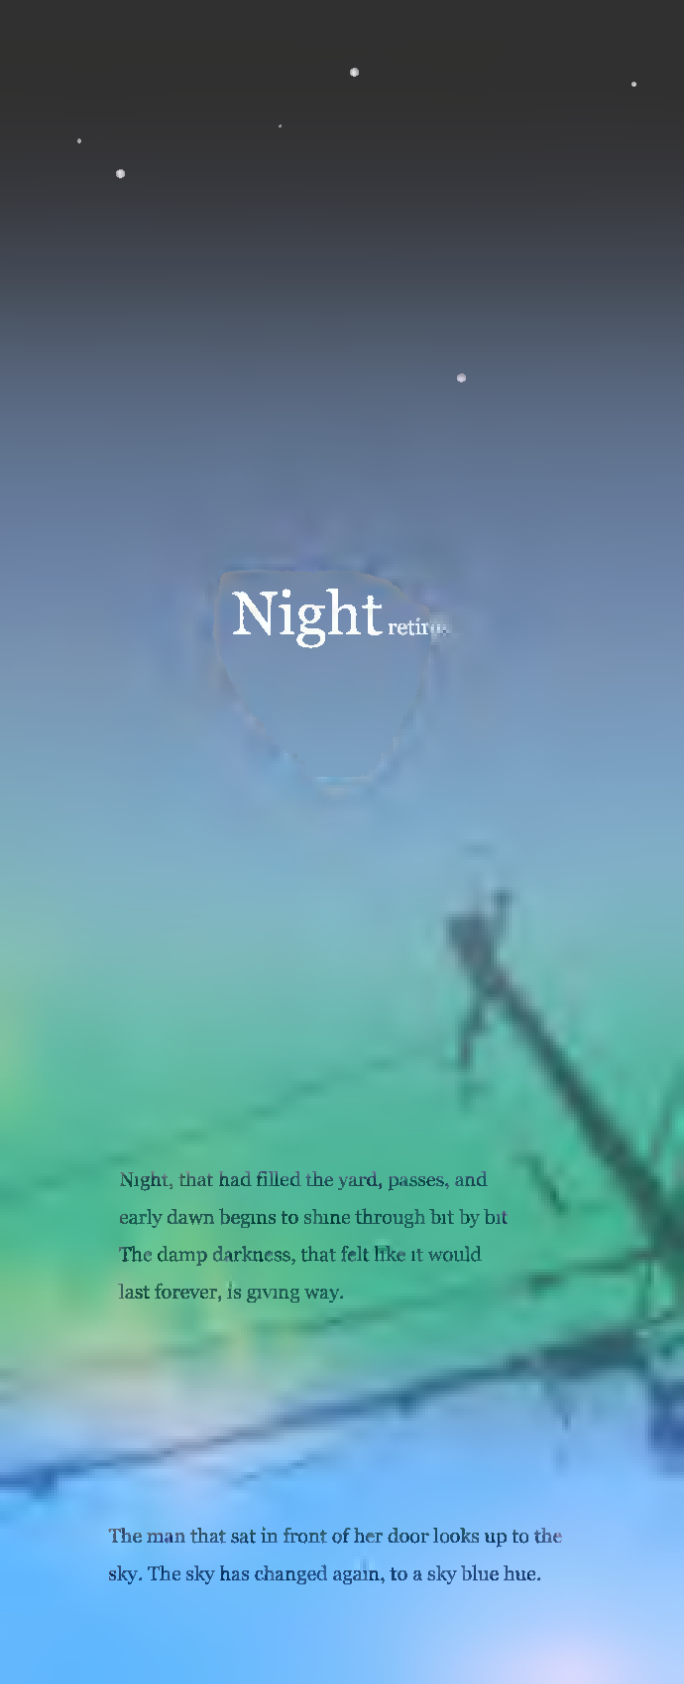
WEBTOON LIVE .com



Night, that had filled the yard, passes, and early dawn begins to shine through bit by bit The damp darkness, that felt like it would last forever, is giving way.

The man that sat in front of her door looks up to the sky. The sky has changed again, to a sky blue hue.

He didn't want it but the day has begun anew.
She still did not appear even as the sun rose.

Like his uncertainty, words were built up all night, words he couldn't bare to say out loud. Finally,
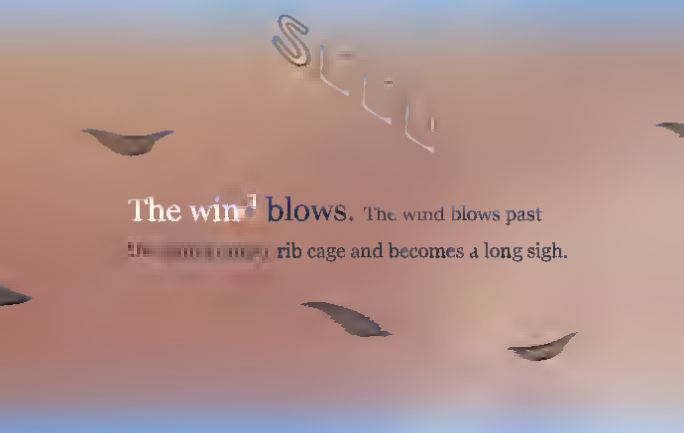
they crept out at dawn

Did she already leave...?



The man dwells countlessly on what he knows. He loves her. And she loves him also.

They both love each other. This is not an assumption but a simple fact, as the time they spent together and their smiles have shown it.

They just don't walk together any more.

The man then thought that the phrase was an unfunny joke.

If one chooses to separate because of another, that cannot be love,
To bid farewell for someone is just an excuse. It is a way for you to pretend you care for the other person when you really cannot handle reality any more

He thought it was a bitter .

But when the woman he loved was choosing that path, he could no longer see it as a .

He knew her and loved her, and he respected her choice and her feelings

He knew that, but his heart did not accept it.

It hurt too much to accept it.

If he couldn't see nor meet her, then where would his love go?

What would he do with his heart that'd hurt each time he breathed?

The man who had scattered about his arms and legs, where his every breath hurt, hears a familiar melody in his ears.
The alarm rings on his phone which he had dropped giving up trying to call with

It's time for work.

The man looks down at his phone that is telling him to return to life.

The dull melody repeatedly told him that he had a place to be at.
The man replied,

The place I want to be at is beside her.

The melody told him again.

"She's gone."

The man picked up his phone and stood up.

She saw from the second floor window of her room the man leaving past the yard.
Looking at his bare back, she repeated what she had always said to herself.

She had stood beside him with just a door to separate them, craving for him each time she heard him wanting her. She had wanted to hug him, to see him, and to hear that he loved her.

She knew he would say it freely and the temptation was great. But she had said this, to wear away these yearnings, each time.

"This is for the best."

The woman had believed that her choice was the right one. Love is when two people complete each other and it finalizes. But in contrast, if it destroys the other, then you cannot call that love.

That is merely selfishness.

She couldn't be selfish Her selfishness was hurting him. She found that out far too late.

And for that, she was very sorry, and she hurt so much.

She couldn't see the man anymore after he had left the main doors. She knew he would have gone to school today since today was not a holiday. Even though his life has been tangled up because of her, she had hoped that he could return back to his safe life now.

And there are still things to do for that. The woman picks up her large clothing bag that was lying in the corner of her room The bag was quite big but considering she may be traveling for a long time, it is a small load

There's still a lot of memories to take.

She reminisces about the two men, the two men that had loved her unconditionally. The time that both men had gifted her with was hard to measure on the scale of happiness in her life, but it was her only light and treasure.

She is planning to take those treasure-like memories and live quietly by herself.

"Thank you. And, I'm sorry."

As she remembers her precious lovers, she freezes.

She cannot remember her old lover's face.

She can remember the face of her current lover clearly, but when she tries to remember her past lover's, their images overlap and she doesn't know why.

Flustered, she deduces she is tired. She is apologetic to her past lover, but her heart is already filled with his parting, and that large emotion has become too much for her to handle.
The woman believes she had better get moving before she feels too tired to.

With her bag, she opens her door and exits the house.

The cold air bites her skin. Despite her mind telling her that she should leave without a second thought, her eyes scan the area to see if she can find any traces of him.
It had been obvious but she did not see any. She cannot see his sadness, his love. The woman looks back at the place the man wept on for her overnight.

He is no longer there. And he won't ever be.

As she stares vacantly, the woman quietly bites her lip and sneaks past that spot, as if the man was still waiting.
The woman opens the main door and walks out onto the street. She takes her steps slowly and tells herself repeatedly like a mantra,

"My love always hurts someone."

She feels tears welling up but she cannot allow herself to cry.
She bites on her lips harder

"I don't want to cry. This is for him, after all.... so let's leave with a smile."

The woman shoves down her emotions and lets go of her lip
She forces a smile. She felt like she was calming down.

"Yeah, smile!"

She walks the empty, early morning street valiantly. She soon reaches the bus stop at the corner and, as she is looking at the bus time table, plans for what she would do next.

She honestly had no plan. She was going to get on a city bus and go to the train station, where she would get the first train to wherever. She was going to get off when she saw the sea. Though, not at Jeong Dong Jin.

"Let's just look around for a while, and find a new place to work and a place to stay."

Because of her past that had forced her to become independent from a very young age, she felt that she could live anywhere doing anything.
The woman felt she was admirable.
It was very little but she felt that what she did helped her mother, even just a little.

"Shall I say goodbye to mother?"

The woman, after pondering for a second, shakes her head. Her mother would be better off if she didn't say anything to her. Her mother would feel much better if she left quietly and lived quietly.
The bus arrives at the station while she is thinking about this and that.
In front of the woman, the bus opens its door.
The woman asks the middle-aged driver of the bus,

The reply was one that was half-hearted and given without looking at her, but all she needed was a confirmation.
The woman pulls her bag toward the bus to get on.

"This is really it."

As she thinks of this as she is about to get on the bus, the woman's foot stops in mid-air.

"I can't come back."

The foot that was in mid-air comes back down on the pavement, and not on the bus. The bus driver gives the woman a strange look as the woman that had asked that sort of question does not get on. Her being the bus station's only passenger made it feel like she would get on, but she doesn't.

The driver thinks the woman is wasting his time and frowns at her.

Hey, Miss, are you going to get on or not?

The driver's complaint snaps back the woman's lingering attachment and she replies.
She feels tears welling up again and her voice becoming raspy

Pardon? Yes. I will.... get on.

As she steps on the bus, she feels the thought she had suppressed exploding out.

"I want to see him."

Just then, as if her hope had become reality, someone hugs her from behind. She is surprised at the sudden act but she couldn't look back. If she did, she was scared that the arms that hug her, and the slight shake that she feels from them, will disappear. The bus driver who is looking upon this sight, frowns deeper.

What the hell are they doing, this early in the morning?

Seeing the bus driver's annoyed expression, while she couldn't believe the arms are around her, she knew it was real.

Then, he spoke.

Don't leave.

His low voice had tears in them. The woman begins to feel the tears she had held back flowing out. From the bus, her feet lands back on the pavement.

The bus angrily shuts its door and leaves the station.

He slowly turns her around, who is crying with a stunned expression. The woman makes no protest and looks at him. The tear-stained man looks into her eyes and says,

Don't leave me.

The woman's bag drops to the floor. The woman tries to stop her tears with both her hands. With more tears and shudders, muffled noises surround her.

The two look at each other without saying a word. She continues to cry silently, while the man looked at her face wondering what he should say first.

Through their silence, many more buses pass, and people pass.

At times, people looked upon this man who seem to be making this woman cry with irritation, but the man did not care. Regardless of the process, he found her again
He did not plan to let her go again. She was his.....

Why did you come back?

When she finally responded after her tears stopped, the man felt a small edge in her voice He replies,

Because I couldn't just let you go.

Why?

Eh? Because I love...

Before the man had finished, the woman's reply had thrown him into confusion.

Love doesn't solve anything.

The woman's voice was so flat, it was hard to believe that she was crying her eyes out moments before. The man had believed that her tears would have dried out her voice. Her unexpected reaction left him speechless.

Love is just a psychological consolation.
It does nothing good for the reality of things.
And our love made trouble. Yes, we loved each other. But what do we have left?

The woman's words hurt the man. The man felt he needed to justify it. He smiles awkwardly and says,

We did have a bit happen but it wasn't much.
I can't let you go just because of that.

You lost your job, and I became a woman that ruined a man's life. Is that really just "a bit" ?

That's not what I meant.

It all happened because the woman you loved was me. If it were anyone else, you would have been better off

The woman said this in a cold, cool voice, as if she had already made up her mind. He could not handle the words that felt like she was cutting her own heart out.

Stop it!

No one in this world celebrates us.
They want us apart.
And that is why we're wrong.
We cannot love with just love alone.

The woman smiles sadly as she finished.

The man looks at her without saying anything. He feels like he knew why she had come to such a drastic conclusion, what she was fearing. She was scared that his misfortune came from her. And that this misfortune will make him end up like her old lover. She is trying to leave while she feels that her bad luck had not fully rubbed onto him.

He knows what she was feeling.

And he knows what he was feeling. The man replied calmly,

Then do I just talk like I did before?
Like how a person who did not exist before would suddenly come in, and the person disappears, do I just think that I have to revert back to before it ever happened?

Yes. That's it.

She was smiling but looked like she could burst into tears with the slightest breeze. She stood silently. He reached out his hand to her.

He cups her neck with his left hand and pulls her gently toward him with his right.

The woman is pulled to him feebly.

I can't do that. I didn't realize it before but I think I do now. Even if you're gone, I can't go back to how I was before you happened. Loving you now, I've become a totally different man than the man I was.

Her scent tickles his nose and he feels her warmth in his arms.

He closes his eyes.

You are my hope.

Now I know for sure.

She feels herself tear up suddenly at the word 'hope'. The tears start welling up in her eyes.
The man then pushes her slowly away and kneels on one knee in front of her. He raises his right hand and holds her left.

Early morning, at an empty bus stop, it was not the place to do this, but he felt that if he does not do it now, he won't be able to do it again.

He says with a smile,

This is not a fancy restaurant and there's no wine or candles. And I don't have a ring on me at the moment. But I'll summon up my courage and say it.

The man looks into the woman's tear-filled eyes.

Please marry me.

She starts crying without saying anything.
But the man thinks that he has heard her reply.
